Into the European Union, despite the diversity of agricultural structures, almost all of good performance, of the production systems and different technical levels, there is only one policy applied, and the agricultural products commercial trades are totally free between the EU countries.

This union represents a complex institutional structure, unique through time, which is based, on economical level, on one market for all goods, on a common agricultural policy and on numerous other common policies.

My choice was common agricultural policy because our country was a country with agricultural preponderance, and there are differences in our and EU's agriculture starting with our adherence to the union. So if we don't want to be taken by surprise, we should know at least the EU's agricultural policy evolution.
