

LOCATION OF PROCUREMENT IN THE ORGANIZATION

Pakurár M., Réka Edit Villányi

Abstract

The supply chain management (SCM) is a rarely new and modern area of operational management. Its development was aided by information technology. Farmer-organizations don't feel the importance of procurement in Hungary, so the companies either don't employ separate labor to this function, nevertheless that a good procurer can have a great influence on functionality and profitability of the company. Sometimes directors of the companies have to deal with the elaboration of procurement management strategy and work-coordination alone, that means procurement deserved the interest of upward-management.

The place of procurement management in company-organization is influenced by company size. By this we can differentiate one parted and several parted companies. My aim is to demonstrate the place of supply management in company-organization.